1) Experimental Learning:-

Experiential learning engages students in critical thinking, problem solving and decision making in contexts that are personally relevant to them. This approach to learning provides students opportunities for debriefing and consolidation of ideas and skills through feedback, reflection and the application of the ideas and skills to new circumstances.

Experiential learning focuses on the learning experiences for the individual. One example of experiential learning is going to the Industry and learning through observation and interaction with the industry persons, as opposed to reading about machines from a book. Thus, student makes inventions and experiments with knowledge first- hand, instead of hearing or reading about others' experiences. Likewise, internship, industrial training, field trips provide opportunities in a student's field of interest and can give valuable experiential learning which contributes significantly to the student's overall understanding of the real- world environment.

1. The first part of the text discusses the importance of maintaining accurate records of all transactions, including sales, purchases, and expenses. It emphasizes that proper record-keeping is essential for determining the correct amount of tax liability and for defending against potential audits.

2. The second part of the text addresses the issue of deductibility of expenses. It explains that only those expenses that are directly related to the business and are necessary for the production of income are eligible for deduction. Examples of deductible expenses include rent, utilities, salaries, and advertising costs.

3. The third part of the text discusses the treatment of capital assets for tax purposes. It explains that capital assets, such as real estate and equipment, are subject to depreciation, which allows the cost of the asset to be spread over its useful life. This results in a reduction of taxable income over time.

4. The fourth part of the text discusses the treatment of income for tax purposes. It explains that income is generally taxable, but there are certain types of income that are exempt from taxation, such as interest on municipal bonds and dividends from qualified corporations.

5. The fifth part of the text discusses the treatment of losses for tax purposes. It explains that losses are generally deductible, but there are certain limitations on the amount of loss that can be deducted in any one year. For example, the loss on the sale of a capital asset is limited to the amount of gain realized on the sale.

6. The sixth part of the text discusses the treatment of gifts and inheritances for tax purposes. It explains that gifts and inheritances are generally taxable, but there are certain exemptions, such as the annual exclusion for gifts and the unified credit for estate taxes.

7. The seventh part of the text discusses the treatment of death for tax purposes. It explains that the estate of a decedent is generally taxable, but there are certain exemptions, such as the marital deduction and the charitable deduction.

8. The eighth part of the text discusses the treatment of bankruptcy for tax purposes. It explains that the bankruptcy of a debtor does not automatically discharge all tax liabilities. Certain taxes, such as income taxes and estate taxes, are generally not dischargeable in bankruptcy.

9. The ninth part of the text discusses the treatment of divorce for tax purposes. It explains that the divorce of a couple does not automatically change the tax status of the parties. For example, the income of a couple is generally treated as joint income for tax purposes, even if the couple is divorced.

10. The tenth part of the text discusses the treatment of remarriage for tax purposes. It explains that the remarriage of a divorced couple does not automatically change the tax status of the parties. For example, the income of a couple is generally treated as joint income for tax purposes, even if the couple is remarried.
